Molten glass & teak root sculptures

In a village in the hills above Ubud in Bali is a glassblowing workshop. In one corner two women are preparing broken sheet glass for recycling. Close by four men rush to and fro heating the glass until it glows, then deftly blowing it into an extraordinary range of shapes.

Elsewhere other artisans are preparing discarded fragments of root. The result is a collection of beautiful and unique pieces, the glass melted to hug the natural contours of the root on which they perch, frozen in time like Dali's molten watches...

More handcarved and painted birds from Bali, made with sustainable albesia wood. We're very impressed with the work that goes into crafting these, especially since the artisans have never seen these British birds.

On our recent visit to Bali, we visited Wayan Dirga (pictured below). He is using one of the drills supplied by us last year, when £8,000 of our profits were used to distribute tools to our producer groups in Bali.

These new additions to our recycled glass mobile range are made by a young couple with two children in Tegallalang, near Ubud, the heart of the crafts industry in Bali.

They're a wonderful example of creativity, showing how simple pieces of broken glass can be painted and put together to make an attractive chime, and not just attractive visually. They also produce a calming sound when touched by the wind.

Iron bells and chimes

Made by artisans in New Delhi, India, out of recycled wrought iron, these bells are a wonderful addition to our metal chime range. The scrap iron is shredded so that less energy is used in the melting process. After the iron is melted, it is then cooled and solidified into these carefully shaped bells and chimes. Wrought iron is a good recycled metal as it has a low carbon content and the recycle process saves energy whilst retaining original quality.

Aspiration International works for the welfare of artisans and their families all over India, by promoting and developing cottage industries, improving social and economic conditions and providing fair wages to the artisans.

Bamboo is easily renewable and can play an important part in tackling climate change. As a raw material it is excellent both for environmental and economic sustainability in rural areas. It takes up little space, grows to maturity in under 5 years, and can be harvested regularly. For products like these chimes, it's ideal, as it grows freely in the woods and empty spaces close to our producer's workshop. This is in a village near Ubud, Bali; they already live a sustainable lifestyle, growing their rice and other crops close by, and the sale of windchimes allows them to maintain the long-term sustainability of their community.

Catch your dreams!

Dreamcatchers are a Native American Indian tradition, supposed to protect you from bad dreams, whilst letting the good dreams through; they're supposed to slip through the hole in the centre, and glide down the feathers to the sleeping person below.

Ours are made in Bali, and our purchases keep several families in work each year. That was especially helpful during Covid, when sales to tourists dried up completely.

Dreams that make a difference

The crochet work for our dreamcatchers is produced by women in a remote mountain village in Bali, providing a much needed supplementary income to their main employment in agriculture.

Dreams of shifting white ...

Bright white pools in the dappled afternoon sun, our beautiful white dreamcatchers shift in the unseen breeze of the forest. What passing reveries will they snare in their gentle nets before the sunrise?

Paper mobiles

These mobiles are handmade in Thailand using traditional techniques. The raw material for 'saa' paper, comes from the bark of the Mulberry tree, which every year peels off, and can be used to make paper. It's a totally sustainable material; if not used, it would simply go to waste.

These sikas and terracotta planters are from the Jute Works, Bangladesh.

Bangladesh is one of the poorest countries in the world and is badly threatened by global warming as the seas rise. The Jute Works, founded in 1973, is one of the oldest Fair Trade organisations in the world and we're proud to support them. Natural, local raw materials are used throughout. Most of the artisans are women in rural or slum areas.

Sandstone Buddhas and Ganeshas

These sandstone buddhas and gods are made in a small workshop in rural Bali – they're great both indoors and out, are well priced and extremely popular. We recommend them.

Sandstone is a great eco-friendly option as it needs only a fraction of the energy needed to create man-made stone like concrete or brick.

Sandstone Buddhas

If left outdoors, these sandstone cast Buddhas and other pieces will retain their brightness for years. Eventually they will probably grow a rich living patina of moss and lichen, blending in with other garden plants (our MD comments "I've had one in my garden for 24 months – and it's almost as good as new").

They can of course also be used indoors.

Wooden stools

These animal stools and the table are just perfect for a special children's party! And the stools on the following pages couldn't do a better job at making young children feel special. They're sturdy so they won't tip over all the time, and even if they do... well it's hardly any distance from the floor.

The wood is sourced from the Samanea Saman or 'Raintree' (Acaccia or 'Monkey Pod tree') and can be recognised by its characteristically umbrella shaped canopy. Often planted by roads to give shade, it grows so quickly that it's a perfect eco friendly hardwood for furniture production.

Fair trade rubber and gardening gloves

These gloves are made from Fair Trade latex and natural rubber harvested by small-scale farmers in Sri Lanka. The farmers earn a premium from the exporters, who have also invested in education, medical support and correct rubber tapping knives. They also provide training to the farmers on the best ways to care for the trees, and manage the land they grow on.
